WELCOME

We are delighted to introduce to you the 2018 edition of Alpine View; Knight Frank's flagship publication focusing on the very finest alpine homes for sale across the French and Swiss Alps as well as some incredible properties in the US resort of Aspen.

This year we have dedicated our editorial section to two of the biggest names in the Alps today. The first article is with legendary freeride skier Warren Smith. Today Smith has moved on from being one of the best professional freeride skiers Britain has produced, to head the ever expanding Warren Smith Ski academy in Verbier. Smith's ambition is to teach skiers of all abilities how to progress from piste skiing to knee-deep in powder off-piste skiing through his use of biomechanics.

Our second interview is with the CEO of the fashion label Superdry, Mr James Holder. Superdry seemingly progressed overnight from being a little known but much sought-after brand to today having shop fronts in the most iconic Alpine resorts in the world: Megève, Chamonix and Courchevel to name but a few.

This year we have opted to give our research page a personal touch with a Q & A. We are fortunate to call the pistes and télécabines of the likes of Verbier and Val d'Isère as our work places, and as such have an unrivalled insight into not only what makes a ski resort successful, but also what the intricacies are of the local real estate market in each of the resorts Knight Frank operates in.

There has been a textbook start to the 2017-2018 ski season. All resorts are opening on time, all lifts are operating at 100%, snow cover is complete and temperatures are well into minus figures. We hope that the conditions this year will tempt you out to the world's highest playground and explore our selection of the finest chalets, apartments and new build opportunities currently available.

Knight Frank's Alpine team in London as well as our network of 13 offices across the Alps, remain on hand to welcome you back to the mountains this year and advising you on the sale, purchase, let or management of your alpine home.

Extremely Alpine

When in the Alps and looking for adventure, there is one man you might want to call on, and that's Warren Smith.

By Zoe Dare Hall

The professional freeskiier, who swapped his hometown of Hemel Hempstead 25 years ago for a life in the Swiss resort of Verbier where he runs his eponymous ski academy, has honed a teaching technique based on biomechanics that can turn even the most hesitant skier into an Alpine adrenalin junkie.

"Once you get beyond the stigma that anyone who wants to take part in extreme sports is crazy, there is a method to it. You just break it down and tackle it gradually", says Smith, who says he can "create miracles" in all sorts of skiers. He's the man who taught Claudia Schiffer and Bradley Wiggins all they know on snow, and whose boot camp method so suited Lawrence Dallaglio that the former English rugby captain took just three weeks – where a few months is the norm – to descend the perilous back side of Verbier's Mont Fort (3,228m). "We safely fuel the need for adrenalin. It's the buzz we all got as kids – that sense of freedom and of not being confined. Once people get a taste for it, they keep coming back", says Smith.

The ways to experience the Alps at high speed become ever more inventive by the year. Verbier is at the forefront of much of it as home to the world's hardest freeride competition, Verbier Xtreme, which sees the top freeskiiers and snowboarders tackle the unforgivingly north face of the Bec des Rosses mountain. "We're used to seeing extreme athletes pushing their boundaries here, but no one just gets on top of a 60 degree rock face and skis down. They put in an unbelievable amount of practice and take it to a technical level way beyond what you imagine. They're calculated professionals who love the adrenalin rush", says Smith.

Heli-skiing is big in Verbier, too, with a constant swarm of helicopters at weekends depositing skiers on remote mountaintops with untouched snow. "People come to us with a map of a rock face of a couloir they want to tackle. The ski equipment revolution has given them added confidence and so has social media", Smith comments. "They see extreme ski video clips of international athletes jumping off a cliff and they want to get close to it. We bridge the gap between recreational skiing and what you see on YouTube."

When skiing isn't enough, speedriding (or speedflying) could be the next step: a combination of paragliding and skiing that enables you to fly down slopes at incredible speed, then jump off cliff edges and remain airborne until you touch ground in a vast, empty expanse of virgin snow. Chamonix's raw, rugged mountains are the perfect place to do it. "The views are incredible, over Mont Blanc and the Aiguille du Midi", says Smith. So, too, is Les Arcs, where the sport was invented in 2003, and Morzine-Avoriaz, where the most professional practitioners, who are like free-runners on snow, have filmed themselves speed-riding among the chalets before they hurl themselves off a mountain.

The truly fearless can extend this desire to take flight by acquiring a wingsuit – which is variously likened to Batman, Birdman or a flying awards the fallen at this spot a special tie.

Interlaken in Switzerland is another mecca for extreme sports enthusiasts. Paragliders routinely descend into the town centre and those who like to do their sight-seeing while zooming vertically towards the ground can bungee jump off the Stockhorn cable car. Taking the bungee theme one step further in the French Alps is Bun J Ride, who blend the heart-pumping activities of ramp jumping, bungee and zip-wiring in one terrifying experience – either off a ramp over a ravine in the Savoyard village of St Jean de Sixt near Annecy, or from the world's first bungee jump trampoline dedicated exclusively to ski jumping in Tignes. You can even bungee jump on a bike.

In case this all sounds like sheer frivolity for restless millennials, Warren Smith assures there is no age limit to enjoying a spot of extreme sport. "The classic age band is 30-50, but if you are relatively fit in your 60s and can work on your technique beforehand, to ensure your body is tuned in and moving on the right axles, you can do all sorts of things never dreamed of", he says.

There's no excuse. The sky's the limit – and one you will be seeing quite a bit of, from various angles – when it comes to the latest ways to enjoy the Alps.

squirrel – and soaring over the Alps at great altitude before touching ground with the help of a parachute. This is arguably the most extreme sport of all, and is banned in Chamonix after a series of fatalities last year, but YouTube is testament to the number of wingsuit fliers who are still seeking the ultimate thrill all over the Swiss and French Alps – including one who successfully flew at high speed through a rock crevice just two metres wide. Summertime throws up an equal number of dazzling ways to get the heart racing in the Alps. "You may not think it, but downhill mountain biking is extreme. The riders hardly touch the ground", says Smith. "The average person couldn't do anything like the experts do, but they can access a similar course, with Verbier, Chamonix and Méribel home to some of the best routes", he says.

Once proficient at tackling the descents at speed, riders might want to attempt the Megavalanche in Alpe d'Huez, a July event that sees thousands of bikers start their 2,600m descent on a glacier, at speeds of up to 100km.

More accessible to the whole family is summer luge. "If you want to dip your toe into an adrenalin experience, summer sledging on specially-built tracks allows your body to feel similar forces to mountain biking", says Smith. Courchevel Moriond 1650 adds an extra dimension with its floodlit 3km track for night time sledging, or seek out The Snooc in Le Grand Bornand, a device that transforms within minutes from touring skis to a slightly elevated toboggan.

Once you get a taste for it, St Moritz might be your next stop and the historic Cresta Run, whose notorious hazard is Shuttlecock Corner. So numerous are the casualties that the Shuttlecock Club

How cult leisurewear brand Superdry is giving haute couture names a run for their money in the mountains

By Zoe Dare Hall

Scan the boutiques in almost any premium Alpine ski resort and, alongside the Chanel stores and the familiar upmarket skiwear names such as Moncler and Canada Goose, you will see a relative newcomer on the scene that is taking the slopes by storm.

Superdry – the global digital brand based in Britain famed for its clothing, which is a mix of British tailoring with a Japanese influence – founded in 2003 and got its big break when David Beckham wore one of their t-shirts two years later. But it was just three years ago that its founders, James Holder and Julian Dunkerton, decided to branch out into the Alps.

For a brand that has found a devoted following that defies age bands, it was crucial that Superdry struck upon the right locations when making its entrée into the Alps. Alpine resorts inspire a deep loyalty – and a certain tribalism – in people. Generations of the same families return to the same ski slopes year after year and, for many, a particular resort becomes the winter meeting place for the same crowd they know back home.

But for a brand to be a success, it needs to transcend all of that and find a common denominator in every location, while also staking its claim in a market that is dominated by a handful of high-end names.

After a huge amount of research, assisted by people on the ground with great insider knowledge of each resort, Superdry chose Chamonix for its inaugural Alpine store. Megève and Courchevel followed soon after and now Superdry has 16 shops in the Alps, with the most recent openings including Val d’Isère, a pop-up shop in Serre Chevalier, and new city franchises in Grenoble, Lyon and Chalon-sur-Saône. They also have their first Swiss presence in Montreux.

Holder loves the mountains regardless of the season. He is a keen, “but not very good” snowboarder, he says. “I can snowboard down a black run, but without much style. My wife, Charlotte, is excellent at it, so for her, the Alps are all about winter.” He, on the other hand, is in his element when hill-running in summer. “I just love being up high, breathing in the clean air.”

Besides his personal love of the Alpine environment, Holder – who honed his entrepreneurial flair as a student selling t-shirts from his mother’s car, before setting up the skatewear brand Bench and, then, the Superdry Group – knew the Alps presented a huge business opportunity for a brand that has quickly become a cult name in leisurewear. “They have always had a battle with high-end brands in Europe”, he says. But relying on the old mantra that if you can’t beat them, join them, Superdry has focused its strategy purely on prime locations – and then capitalised on a growing cross-fertilisation between expensive and more affordable brands. “You could have Moncler with jackets costing €1,000 up, and then us next door, whose jackets can be a tenth of that price. People like the technical detail, they love the product and they migrate to Superdry”, he says.

Often, Superdry will choose an “off pitch” spot in these salubrious resorts, just around the corner from the haute couture names. “We have built up a big upper-end demographic in these locations. Courchevel and Val d’Isère work particularly well for us”, says Holder. “Our shops have become a destination in their own right because of the sheer density of product. Other brands may have just one logo on their sleeves whereas we have 100. We have a very large and constantly evolving collection, so you can wear Superdry without looking like everyone else.”

People were quick to latch on to Superdry as a natural fit in the Alps. “We launched in Chamonix in winter 2014 with a small collection, but people got it immediately”, says Holder. “We had been adopted by the slopes anyway because skiwear is such a hybrid thing. Not only were people wearing our jackets on the slopes they found us fashionable enough to wear for après ski as well.”

Indeed, Alpine resorts could learn a thing or two from Holder when it comes to cracking the holy grail of multi-generational has also helped differentiate his brand from the rest by developing a range of skiwear that people are happy to parade on a night out afterwards, he describes half of Superdry’s ski collection as “full technical”, which means it’s designed purely for the slopes. The other half is “light technical”, he says. “You can still ski and snowboard in it and it will keep you dry and warm, but you can also look good wearing it in the bar”, says Holder. “We know a lot of our customers love and multi-demographic appeal. In London, Superdry’s streetwear may largely be the preserve of millennials, but on the ski slopes, you are as likely to see a 50-year-old financier wearing their logo as well as a 15-year-old boarder. “The span of people wearing our clothes is greater in the Alps than anywhere else. We have transcended the typical skiwear market”, he says.

Where perhaps Holder

après ski as much as the physical thrill of the slopes. The party vibe is very much part of the Superdry spirit.” The brand’s current bestseller is a “super lightweight” BASE jumper jacket with triple zips. “It was designed for our snow ambassador, the professional skier and BASE jumper Matthias Giraud. He’s an extreme skier that performs daily to the highest level and fits the mentality and ethos of the brand. People saw it and it flew off the shelves”, Holder comments. Another garment that has proven similarly popular and now sits in about 3.5 million wardrobes is the triple zip windcheater. “We capture the essence of an item like that and adapt it for technical skiwear. That continuity in our collections is important. There’s no point us making a cookie cutter collection that looks like every other brand.”

The advances in skiwear technology and materials means many of Superdry’s core designs translate easily into garments that suit the slopes. “We brand every product individually, whether it’s retro or sleek black, reflective or scuba neoprene. It just has to be perfectly made for the demographic it’s aimed at”, says Holder. Superdry – whose cut is “as slim as possible while still giving room to move”, he says – has also played a part in winning over the youth market. “Ski clothes used to be baggy and saggy. Now they’re more tailored and stylish. The Scandinavian or Italian silhouette is being adopted by young dudes, so they are migrating to Superdry naturally.”

Holder’s new focus is his company’s SuperDesign Lab, “an innovation studio where we will make more experimental and adventurous products with crazy designs, including a snow lab collection, but they are still massively commercial”, he explains. “It’s what keeps us fresh”.

Everyone remembers their first trip to Aspen—with good reason. It's a city that effortlessly manages to strike a perfect balance between having the feel of a small mountain town with the buzz of a large city.

Unsurprisingly, people are initially drawn to Aspen during the winter due to the unbelievable snow. Very low temperatures and humidity, combined with the high altitude (the base elevation is at 2,422 metres with a top elevation of 3,417 metres) produces incredibly light and dry powder that falls over an enormous amount of terrain that includes four distinct, unattached mountains. Aspen Mountain, known by the locals as 'Ajax', is where it all began and is best known for its steep face, with no beginners' terrain anywhere in the trail system. Highlands is less crowded and is appealing for its expansive and varied terrain, being home to some of the best in-bounds backcountry skiing in the country. Its chief draw is the immense Highland Bowl, which is a rite of passage for expert skiers. Buttermilk slopes are more gentle, but by no means a bunny hill. It is still a big mountain with more than 610 metres of vertical drop, giving novices a sense of the great views that can be had from the top of Aspen peak. The aptly named Snowmass features an abundance of deep snow with 94 trails and the largest vertical decent in the United States at 1,343 metres. During the last ski season, they experienced nearly 817 cm of snowfall. Many of Aspen's residents enjoy the fact that Aspen is very secluded, especially during the winter when the road that links Aspen with eastern Colorado is closed, leaving only one route into town. Unless you fly there, that is. As the line-up of private jets at its small airport will attest, many avoid the one road into Aspen altogether. But it's not just private aircraft that utilise the Aspen airport, commercial carriers have expanded capacity this season by 22% to include 271,403 seats. This expansion has no forecast for abating: the Federal Aviation Administration has just approved plans to greatly increase the size of aircraft that can land there and plans are underway to expand the terminal building. Over the past six years, the resort has invested around $68 million to both on -mountain capital improvements as well as hospitality upgrades. Although winter is what typically brings people to Aspen to begin with, summer has now almost become more popular than the winter. The Food & Wine Classic is the event that kicks off the summer season and serves as a magnet for chefs and wine experts from around the world. Following immediately is the Aspen Ideas Festival, which is produced by the Aspen Institute and is one of the nation's premier gatherings for leaders around the world to discuss challenging current issues. Another landmark event during the summer is the world-renowned Aspen Music Festival, which lasts for 60 days and sees the biggest names in the music industry performing under the Benedict music tent. It is easy to understand why people say, "Aspen, it has it all".

INSIDE KNOWLEDGE...

Between them, Roddy Aris and Alex Koch de Gooreynd have over 16 years' experience working in the ski property industry. We asked them for their take on current market conditions, where the best investment opportunities lie and their outlook for the market.

FRANCE

KNIGHT FRANK INTERNATIONAL

Which of the French resorts has seen the strongest sales activity in recent years and why do you think that is?

Chamonix has gone from strength to strength. Although it does not appeal to those buyers wanting ski in/out options such as in The Three Valleys and Espace Killy, it does appeal to those that love the mountains all year round and are seeking quick and easy access from Geneva International Airport.

Given Switzerland's 20% cap on second homes, along with the strength of the Swiss Franc, are you seeing more Swiss buyers in France?

There was a sudden rise of Swiss enquiries in 2015 when exchange rates moved firmly in favour of CHF denominated buyers as the Franc was unpegged from the Euro. The resorts that benefitted the most from the pendulum swing were Chamonix and Megève. Both being on the doorstep of Geneva and offering year-round appeal. The exchange rate advantage has lessened recently and with it Swiss activity.

SWITZERLAND

Is Swiss real estate still the safe-haven investment that it was?

When we first started working in the Swiss market eight years ago, most of my enquiries were from clients wishing to take advantage of the preferential tax arrangements on offer. This has changed dramatically in recent years with Switzerland proving to be one of the more stable economies for investment. Today my clients are drawn to the region by the stable economy, excellent personal safety and world-class education. The property market has also gone through changes but performance differs hugely from canton to canton. In the city centres, a lack of quality stock has maintained price levels while those regions with an abundance of stock have undergone a price correction.

Aparthotel apartments are sold as commercial acquisitions. Are you seeing more of these opportunities coming to the market?

The Grace Hotel Apartments in St Moritz and a larger chalet project in Zermatt have been the only two resorts to offer this product to date; two markets that have always struggled with stock for non-residents. The concept is an interesting one and one that I fully expect to see adopted throughout the Swiss resorts as they adapt to life after Lex Weber.
